Dear [REDACTED],

I have been meeting with Ben Lotto to discuss a withdraw from a class I took abroad. It has been quite a struggle to overcome the difficulties of the situation. I was hoping that you may be able to reach out to him on my behalf to help him understand the affect of my current Title IX case on my academics this past semester. Essentially, I was suffering deeply from the realizations that I had been avoiding regarding my abuse and rape. It manifesting in largely affecting my Bipolar I disorder and it was a time that I reached to my friends for support rather than Goldsmiths College, which in my opinion is an institution that disregards the mental health of its students. I was in a foreign environment that made me apprehensive to reach out to the Mental Health resources there, they were largely unresponsive to my request to come in for an appointment. I was grappling with new understandings and it was a trying time for me to reach out to a school that I did not have faith would provide me with the support I needed. As a result, I failed a course and not it is a black mark on my academic record and is further exacerbating my emotional and psychological states to deal with this matter as well as my Title IX case.

Best,
Margot
